And "the devil is at work and no mistake," and that there are "spooks on High mountain,"

A party of the braver and brawnier lads of the bailiwick endeavored to solve the mystery a few nights ago, but they soon returned with white faces and quaking limbs, and informed those in waiting by the stoves of the place of rendezvous that it was all well enough for them to be sittin there toasting' their shins and joken, but if they wanted to find out anyter make the trip themselves. Upon being mollified with "something hot," they became more communicative, and related to their open-mouthed audience the following hair-curdling

They smelled phosphorus just as plain as it could be smelled, and while they were wondering what to do next the wind whistled through the trees, producing such unearthly sounds that they came right straight away and let the wind have it all to itself.

Doubting Thomases in the audience plucked up courage and firearms enough to make the trip themselves and they, too, soon returned, looking as pale as the historical ghosts and shaking like rattle-boxes. Nobody showed a disposition to go home, and finally, when the owner informed them that it was time to close up, they is beautiful, all but her skin; and nobody has ever told her how easy it is to put beauty on the skin. ### High Life and Low Necks.

Washington Letter of a st. Louis Girl.

And now, Mamie, there is one thing I must tell you. You know you declared that my three party dresses were all indecently low in the neck, and that you would blush to see me wear them. My poor innocent! How little you know what goes on in the social world here. Why, I have taken out every single plaiting of face which you basted in, plaiting of face which you basted in, leaving them all very low except the blue crepe and the bertha of lilies of the valley. I left in that as they cost so much from Mad. J.'s, and were so pretty. The black velvet is simply corded at the top, you know, with a frill of black chemille fringe for sleeves. My arms look well in that, and as every one here goes extremely decollete I am not a bit conspicuous. On the contrary, they think me old fashioned. Mrs. John D. is very fascinating, and her neck a much admirating the the indica who is much admired by the ladies who are not in the B set. You know they are mortal enemies. You would shrink into nothing with your manvaise houte, poor child, if you could see the women sitting on satin Turk-ish cushions, sipping ices or Russian amovar, in scandalously low dresses, while the diplomatic gentlemen lounge against a screen or door-way behind them, looking down sheepishly all the while. Sometimes I feel scared and want to go home, but I have made up my mind to see the great inaugural ball through.

[New Orleans Letter to Baltmore American.]

Before the Crocle women all the other attractions of the Crocscent City fade away. No better time than last night, and few better places than the Washington Artillery Halt, could have been chosen to view them at an advantage. These are the women who had caused druels, inspired poetry, elevated manners, made men happy py or miserable, and fixed for themselves a place in history. Many of their best, and all their most fashionable representatives were there. They waited in their carriages on side streets until the beautiful pageant of Momus had passed, and then they proceeded to the hall, the nominal occasion being the reception of Rex, where people from every State in the Luion, and from mearly every country and and half to two and a half to two and the quantity of the egg sontains a larger portion of a fall the pole was a farger portion of a pole to the egg is accumulated in the yolk which contains related in the pole workmanship, but proved metal, and others
